Upon a brass plate against the south wall of the south chapel (which was in this position in 1662) is this inscription:— "Hic jacet Johnes Sachevrell Armig flli et heres Radi Sachevrell Armigi dni de Snetterton et hopwell Et Joana ux eju' filia et unica heres herici Stathum Armigeri dni de Morley qui quidem Johnes obiit In bello Ricardi terciij juxta bosworth anno dni M cccc lxxxv Quorum aiabus propicietur deus Amen." Above the inscription are the figures of John and his wife kneeling opposite to each other; he is represented in plate armour, with three boys behind him, and his wife in a close fitting gown and pedimental head-dress, with five girls kneeling behind her similarly attired. The style of the armour is not such as was worn at the battle of Bosworth Field, but many years later, and the general character of the brass shows that it was engraved circa 1525. Joan, the relict of John Sacheverell, was married a second time to William Zouch, and this memorial was probably not put up till after her death. The sons of John and Joan Sacheverell were (1) John, who died in his youth; (2) Henry, of Morley; and (3) Ralph, who obtained the manor of Radcliff-on-Soar by bequest from his uncle, and was the ancestor of the Sacheverells of that place.

"Hic jacent corpora Henrici Sachevrell de Morley in comitata Derbe Milit & Isabella uxoris ejus; qui quide Henric' obiit xxj° die Julii A° dni Mccccclviij."

"Here lyeth y bodye of Kat'yn Babyngton, late wyfe of Thomas babynto' & daught' to henrye Sacheverell, kny. ye whyche said Kat'yn dyed ye xxiiij day of August in ye yere of 0 Lord God M'cccc'xliii."

On a large slab, between the chancel and north aisle, near the altar, are the portraitures in brass of Sir Henry Sacheverell, son of John Sacheverell of the last monument, and his wife Isabella, daughter of Sir John Montgomery, of Cubley. Sir Henry presents a well-finished though small example of the plate armour of that late period; his wife is tastefully dressed in French hood with falling lappet, and in a gown, with sleeves puffed at the shoulders, tied with knots of ribbon in the upper part, but open below, and showing a jewelled tablet bearing the monogram ihc suspended low down by a cord from the sash. Above their heads is a shield of six quarters: Sacheverell, Morley, Stathum, Estaferen, Snitterton (gu., a swan, arg., ducally gorged, or), and Hopwell. Below them is this inscription:—

"Hic jacent corpora Henrici Sachevrell de Morley in comitata Derbe Milit & Isabella uxoris ejus; qui quide Henric' obiit xxj° die Julii A° dni Mccccclviij."

"The stone which contains this brass is very far from being in its original situation. The brass is small, and inferior to the earlier ones; and the stone in which it is placed is extremely rough and unfinished. This led to an examination of the under part of the stone, when it was found that it had once contained a very fine brass of an ecclesiastic, and had been surrounded by a border fillet, bearing an inscription. Those parts of the stone which were not cut away to receive the brass and fillet, were highly polished. The rivets were still quite perfect, and the pitch with which the brass had been imbedded was' quite fresh. It is not unlikely that, after this stone had been deprived of its original treasure, it formed part of the spoil which was brought from Dale Abbey."¹

Against the south wall of the chancel is an alabaster slab, on which are incised the figures of a man in plate armour and a lady. The man's head rests on a tilting helmet, the crest of which is a goat, with a crescent for difference, and his feet on a dog. By the side of the lady's pillow is a small quadruped, no doubt intended for a wolf passant, the crest of the Lowes. Bound the margin is this inscription:—

" Hie jacent corpora Wilhelmi Saucheverell armigeri et Maria uxoris ejus flia et heredis Clementi Lowe de Denby qui quidem Wilhelmus obiit quinto die mensis Septembris anno dni m^od^olviii^o quorum animabus propicietur Deus Amen."

This is the upper slab of what used to be an altar tomb that stood in the nave against the south wall. The front stone of this tomb is fixed against the chancel wall over the upper slab. On it are seven boys and seven girls, kneeling, and also three uncharged shields, two of which are surmounted by crests, that seem to be intended respectively for a raven and a wolf.

This William Sacheverell was the second son of Sir Henry Sacheverell, by his first wife Isabel, daughter of Sir John Montgomery, of Cubley. Clement Lowe, the eldest son of Humphrey Lowe, of Denby, married Isabel, daughter and co-heiress of John Strelley, and their only issue was a daughter Mary. His younger brother, Vincent Lowe, succeeded to the estates. The eldest son and heir of William Sacheverell by his wife Mary, was Ralph, who married Emma, daughter of William Dethick, of Newhall.

*To Henry Sacheverell, grandson of Ralph, the Morley estate eventually came by bequest.

Richard Coke, Ih. Mary, daughter and heir of Thomas Saucheverell,* of Kirkby, in the county of Nottingham, descendant of Saucheverell, of Snitterton and Hopwell, in the county of Derby. The pedigree of this family, in the visitation of 1569, begins with Patrick Saucheverell, lord of Hopwell in the reign of Edward I. Thoroton describes John de Saucheverell as having married a co-heiress of Fitzgerald, five generations before 15 Edward I. (about the year 1020). William, a younger son of John Saucheverell, of Hopwell, by the co-heiress of Leche, married the heiress of Snitterton, and was of Ible and Snitterton. Thomas Saucheverell, his grandson, sold Ible about 1498; Snitterton was retained longer. Thomas Saucheverell, son of Thomas, lived at Kirkby, which had been acquired in marriage with the heiress of Kirkby; he had an only daughter, married to Coke of Trusley. By this marriage, Kirkby Hall, and property in that parish, was conveyed to, and has ever since remained in the family of Coke, it having been acquired by the great-grandfather of Mary Saucheverell in marriage with the sole heiress of Richard Kirkby. Richard Coke d. in 1582, leaving, with a daughter, Dorothy, m. to Valentine Carey, D.D. Bishop of Exeter, five sons, viz.

[PARL]

By his will dated 29 Mar. 1534 (the last day but one of the sixth session of Parliament) he left his lands to his kinsfolk, and in particular his sisters' children, for whom he seems to have been solicitous, arranging a marriage for one of them with the wealthy Christopher Nele of Barrow and bestowing the two others on his own leading supporters John Turvile and George Vincent. To these nieces and to a nephew he left equal shares in his property in tail male, with reversion first to the heirs of two of the nieces, Elizabeth Nele and Jane Vincent, and then to Mary Turvile's brothers, George and William Fyndern, and to another nephew, Ralph Saucheverell. Saucheverell died on 14 Apr. 1534, and was buried beside his wife, who had predeceased him by little more than a year, in Newarke College. It is not known by whom the vacancy left in the Commons was filled unless it was by William Ashby.¹¹

The oldest tomb stands under the canopy in the wall of the north aisle and commemorates Randolphus Sacheverell who died in 1539, aged 33. He is shown lying with his wife Cecily (1508-1538) daughter of John Durance. At Cecily's head is St George, at her feet the Virgin Mary. He was a follower of the house of Lancaster during the Civil Wars of the 15th century, but there is also a double Tudor Rose symbolising the union of York and Lancaster. He later married Anna but her death is not filled in. [INTERNET]

Nearby is the tomb to his son Henry who died in 1558 aged 32. His first wife Lucy née Pole (1528-1554) lies by his side. They had two sons and a daughter. The tomb chest is decorated with 16 Shields carried by children, probably decorative weepers, however some chrisom babies are seen. The tomb of the third Henry (d. 1625) shows him alone on the tomb chest, and also two babies in swaddling clothes (his son and a daughter) and his daughter Eleanor. Above the tomb canopy are his three wives, one behind the other. (Marie, daughter of Robert Gittings, died 1600, Elizabeth née Copleay, died 1616, and Lucie née Boughton died 1625.) Henry's heir and one daughter died young, his surviving daughter Eleanor, married Roger Columbello. Henry did not approve this match and bequeathed the Manor of Ratcliffe to a nephew, Sir Thomas Hutchinson son of his sister Jane, who was wed to Thomas Hutchinson of Cropwell Butler. So Thomas, having taken pity on Eleanor gave her half of the estate. The remaining half passed to Colonel John Hutchinson on the death of his father in 1643.

NOTES BY THE EDITOR.

The family of the Sacheverells is very ancient. The visitation of 1509 derives it from Patrick Sacheverell, Lord of Hopwell, in the time of Edward I. Thoroton, however (Thoroton's Nottinghamshire, page 50), commences the pedigree five generations earlier, with John Sacheverell, who married a coheiress of Fitz-Ercald.
The family possessed at one time many lordships in Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire—chiefly at Barton, near Nottingham, at Morley, and at Ratcliffe-on-Soar. Their manor-house at Barton has long since been pulled down, and the property sold to the Clifton family. Robert Sacheverell, to whom our author dedicates his book, and whom he styles his "kinsman, and head of his family," was the son of William Sacheverell, Esq., of Barton, who was a Member in several Parliaments, and a Minister of William III. He represented Derbyshire from 1661 to 1680, and Nottinghamshire from 1680 to 1690. He died in 1691. This William Sacheverell married first Maria, eldest daughter of William Staunton, Esq., in the county of Nottingham, by whom he had five sons and four daughters—viz., Henry, William, Radulph, Mary, William, Elizabeth, Jocosa, Robert, and Catherine. Of these, Henry, Radulph, both the Williams, and Catherine died young, in the mother's lifetime. She herself died on the 19th of August, 1664. Her only surviving son, Robert (to whom this work is dedicated), married Elizabeth Staunton, daughter of William de Staunton, and by her had one only child, Elizabeth, married to Edward Pole, of Radbourne, an ancestor of the present Edward Sacheverell Chandos Pole, Esq., who is thus the representative of the family on the female side; the male line becoming extinct in Henry, nephew of the above Robert, who died in 1724, aged 15. Robert, the head of the family, died in 1714. On the death of his first wife, Mary, William, the father of the above Robert, married Jane Newton, daughter of Sir John Newton, Baronet, of Barascote, county Gloucester, by whom he had one son, William, who may have been our author, who would in this case have been half-brother to the Robert whom he names as his kinsman. This William married Alicia Sitwell, by whom he had two sons, William, who died A.D. 1723, aged 16, and Henry, who died A.D. 1724, aged 15, both without issue. There are many and interesting monuments of the Sacheverell family in the parish church at Ratcliffe, and the church of Morley, near Derby, is almost filled with them. There are also several in Barton Church, Monument in Morley Church:—

Here lies the body of William Sacheverell, Esq., son and heir of Henry Sacheverell, late of Barton, in the county of Nottingham, Esq., who served his king and country with great honour and fidelity in several Parliaments. He left issue by his first wife, Robert, Elizabeth, and Joyce; and by his second wife, William, John, Edward, and Jane, and died the 9th day of October, A.D. 1691. On the side of the above monument, which is an altar tomb, is the following inscription : — Here also lyeth the body of Mrs. Jane Sacheverell, second wife to William Sacheverell, of Barton, in the county of Nottingham, Esq., by whom he had issue William, John, Jane, Edward, and Abigail. She was daughter of Sir John Newton, of Barascote, in the county of Gloucester, and was buried March the 24th, 1709.

In Barton Church we have the following monuments:—

At the north-east end, on the ground, one of alabaster, with this inscription, for William Sacheverell, son of the above mentioned William Sacheverell, of Morley.—

"Hic jacet corpus Gulielmi Sacheverelli de Barton, in comitatu Nottinghamiensi, armigeri, Gulielmi Sacheverell de Barton predicto, armigeri, et Janae, secundae thalami socie, Johanni Newton, Baronetto, Lincolnensi, prognato filii nati maximi. Uxorem Aliciam, prius in cœlum regressam ipse, sibi non suis feliciter, secutus est, quinto die Septembris, A.D. 1715."

Another monument in the same church, to Mary Sacheverell, the wife of the first-named William Sacheverell, has the subjoined inscription :—

" Hic jacet corpus Marise Sacheverelli filiae nati maxime Gulielmi Staunton, nuper Staunton, in comitatu Nottinghamiensi, armigeri, uxoris Gulielmi Sacheverell de Morley, in comitatu Derbiensi, armigeri, hujus Manerii Domini qui ex ea suscepit Henricum, Gulielmum, Radulphum, Mariam, Gulielmum, Elizabetham, Jocosam, Robertum, et Catherinam. Ex quibus quatuor filii cum una filiola matre adhuc Superstite nee non acerbam Supradicti Henrici primogeniti hie itidem sepulti mortem supra quam ferre valuit, deflente, supremam diem obierunt. Maria vero, Elizabeths, Jocos, et Roberto in vivia relictis, ipsa decimo nono die Augusti Anno Domini MDCLXXIV. vitam cum morte commutavit."

There is good reason for believing that the sculptor has inserted an X too much in the last-named date, and that it ought to read MDCLXIV.

In the chancel of Barton Church, on the south side, is a monument for Henry Sacheverell; and on the south-east end one for Radulph, or Ralph, Sacheverell. There are also others in the same church.

I have not been able to connect with this family the famous Dr. Henry Sacheverell, son of the Rev. Joshua Sacheverell, rector of St. Peter's Church, Malbro', and Prebendary of Sarum, who was tried for high crimes and misdemeanours (see vol. iii., p. 293 of Celebrated Trials), and who is mentioned in a note to Dr. Johnson's Life of Addison, page 77 of Murphey's edition of Johnson's Works, vol. x., 8vo., London, 1801. He may have been a descendant of one of the fourteen children of Radulph Sacheverell, the great great grandfather of the William presumed to be our author, of which children we have no pedigree. The family was Dorsetshire, and lived at Eaststoke. Dr. Henry Sacheverell had a considerable estate left him at Callow, in Derbyshire, by George, son of Valence Sacheverell, Lord of the Manor of Newhall, Warwickshire, and who was a natural son of Henry Sacheverell, of Barton.

The arms of the Sacheverell family are, "Argent on a saltire, az., five water-bougets or." For the pedigree appended at the end of the Notes, I am indebted, partly, to Thoroton's Uistory of Nottinghamshire, and more especially to the kindness of the Rev. Samuel Fox, rector of Morley, and also to the valued labours of the Rev. George Dodds, D.D., rector of Great Corringham, Lincolnshire. For further details, consult Harl. Collection, British Museum—1082, fo. 77.b; 1093, fo. 78.b; 1400, fo. 356, 3.b; 1431, fo. 8; 1555, fo. 63 (a. b.); 6125, fo. 4.b; 6128, fo. 109.b.

The estates of Morley, after continuing in the Stathum family for four generations, passed into the hands of the Sacheverells, by the marriage of Joan, daughter and sole heiress of Henry Stathum, with John Sacheverell, son and heir of Ralph Sacheverell, of Snitterton and Hopwell, by Joan, daughter of John Curzon, of Kedleston. In a note of Ashmole's to the visitation of this church in 1662, it is stated that this ancient family originally came from "Sau-cheverell, a towne in Normandy, and that the name is derived 'de saltu Caprioli, a goates leape' "The early pedigrees of this family are much confused, but that given in Thoroton's Nottinghamshire, the one usually quoted, is undoubtedly faulty in several particulars. The one that seems the most accurate, so far as we have been able to test it, is that in the Warwickshire Visitation, 1619.² Patricius de Saucheverell, about the end of the reign of Henry III., held a fourth part of a knight's fee at Hopwell, parish of Sawley, under Nigel de Longford, and Nigel under the bishop of the diocese. He also held a whole knight's fee of the same manor immediately under the king.³ Patrick married the daughter and heiress of Snitterton, of Snitterton, Darley Dale, whence that property came to the family. Robert Sacheverell, the sixth in descent from Patrick, married for his first wife the heiress of John Hopwell. Their son John married Anne, daughter (but not co-heiress, as asserted by Thoroton, Lysons, etc.), of Sir Roger Leche, of Chatsworth, and their eldest son and heir was Ralph, father of John Sacheverell, who married the heiress of Stathum.

Upon a brass plate against the south wall of the south chapel (which was in this position in 1662) is this inscription:—

"Hic jacet Johnes Sachevrell Armig flli et heres Radi Sachevrell Armigi
dni de Snetterton et hopwell Et Joana ux eju' filia et unica heres herici Stathum Armigeri dni de Morley qui quidem Johnes obiit In bello Ricardi tercij juxta bosworth anno dni M cccc lxxxv Quorum aiabus propicietur deus Amen."

Above the inscription are the figures of John and his wife kneeling opposite to each other; he is represented in plate armour, with three boys behind him, and his wife in a close fitting gown and pedimental head-dress, with five girls kneeling behind her similarly attired. The style of the armour is not such as was worn at the battle of Bosworth Field, but many years later, and the general character of the brass shows that it was engraved circa 1525. Joan, the relict of John Sacheverell, was married a second time to William Zouch, and this memorial was probably not put up till after her death. The sons of John and Joan Sacheverell were (1) John, who died in his youth; (2) Henry, of Morley; and (3) Ralph, who obtained the manor of Radcliff-on-Soar by bequest from his uncle, and was the ancestor of the Sacheverells of that place.

Scrolls bearing an invocation to. S. Christopher (who seems to have been the patron saint of the lords of Morley, and to whom we believe that the altar at the end of the south aisle was dedicated) proceed from the heads of the figures to a representation of that saint bearing the Holy Child.

There are three shields of arms on this brass. (1) Sacheverell (arg., on a saltire, az., five water-bougets, or) and Hopwell⁴ (arg., three hares playing upon bag-pipes, gu.) quarterly, impaling Curzon. (2) Sacheverell and Hopwell quarterly, impaling Stathum and Morley quarterly. (3) Sacheverell and Hopwell quarterly.

On a large slab, between the chancel and north aisle, near the altar, are the portraitures in brass of Sir Henry Sacheverell, son of John Sacheverell of the last monument, and his wife Isabella, daughter of Sir John Montgomery, of Cubley. Sir Henry presents a well-finished though small example of the plate armour of that late period; his wife is tastefully dressed in French hood with falling lappet, and in a gown, with sleeves puffed at the shoulders, tied with knots of ribbon in the upper part, but open below, and showing a jewelled tablet bearing the monogram ihc suspended low down by a cord from the sash. Above their heads is a shield of six quarters: Sacheverell, Morley, Stathum, Estaferen, Snitterton (gu., a swan, arg., ducally gorged, or), and Hopwell. Below them is this inscription:—

"Hic jacent corpora Henrici Sachevrell de Morley in comitata Derbe Milit
& Isabella uxoris ejus; qui quide Henric' obiit xxj° die Julii A° dni Mccccclviij."

"The stone which contains this brass is very far from being in its original situation. The brass is small, and inferior to the earlier ones; and the stone in which it is placed is extremely rough and unfinished. This led to an examination of the under part of the stone, when it was found that it had once contained a very fine brass of an ecclesiastic, and had been surrounded by a border fillet, bearing an inscription. Those parts of the stone which were not cut away to receive the brass and fillet, were highly polished. The rivets were still quite perfect, and the pitch with which the brass had been imbedded was quite fresh. It is not unlikely that, after this stone had been deprived of its original treasure, it formed part of the spoil which was brought from Dale Abbey."⁵

We have now come to the end of the description of this most interesting series of brasses, by far the most complete and perfect of any church in the midland district, but it remains to note one or two of the monuments of a later date.

Sir Henry Sacheverell left five sons and five daughters. To one only of these children is there any monument now extant at Morley, viz., to Katharine, who was married to Thomas Babington, of Dethick. Her monument is a raised tomb against the north wall at the east end of the north aisle, upon which reclines a well-executed effigy in alabaster. Bound the margin is this inscription:—

"Here lyeth y bodye of Kat'yn Babyngton, late wyfe of Thomas babynto' &
daught' to henrye Sacheverell, knyht. ye whyche said Kat'yn dyed ye xxiij day of August in ye yere of O Lord God M'cccc'xliii."

In front of the tomb is an eight-quartered shield of Babington. (Babington, Dethick, Alfretton, Bret, Allestree, Stafford of Grafton, Grey, and Aylesbury) impaling Sacheverell quartering Morley and Hopwell.⁶ The shield is flanked by eight sons and five daughters. The names of only four of these children are known, so that it may be concluded that the others died in their infancy:— (1) Henry, the heir; (2) Edmund, who married Mary, daughter of George Zouch, of Codnor; (3) Anne, married to John, Baron Darcy; and (4) Margaret, married to Thomas Reresby, of Thribergh and Ashover.⁷ Katharine Babington was buried, according to the parish registers, on August 27th.

The registers contain an entry of the second marriage of Sir Henry Sacheverell, with Margery, daughter of Sir John Holford, which occurred on November 28th, 1548, his first wife, Isabel, having only died March 28th of the same year. His second wife was buried October 16th, 1553. And here it may be noted, as not a little remarkable, that not only did several of the Sacheverells, who were determined recusants or adherents to the Roman faith, obtain burial within the church, but would appear, from the entries in the registers, to have been buried after the ordinary course with Anglican rites. This was distinctly illegal, for recusants were excommunicate, and had to be buried at night without any service, as several of our old Derbyshire registers bear witness.⁸ Neither John Sacheverell, son and heir of Sir Henry, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Pierpoint, nor his son John, who married Katharine, daughter of Sir Anthony Fitzherbert, have any monuments, nor are they mentioned in the registers. This probably arose from the fierceness of the persecution they underwent for clinging to the faith of their fathers, for which they were repeatedly fined and imprisoned. This was especially the case with the son-in-law of the famous judge; he was imprisoned in the Counter, Wood Street, by order of the Bishops of London, Ely, and Chester, Commissioners of Recusants, in 1561, and though subsequently released, he was again put in prison, where we believe he died.⁹ The son and heir of John and Katharine Sacheverell, was Henry Sacheverell, who lived in the quieter times of James I. There is no memorial of him, but the registers say:—"1620, June 15. Old Henry Sacheverell Esquier Died." It should be noted that there is no entry of his burial.

The eldest son of Henry Sacheverell, by Joan, daughter of Sir Humphrey Bradbourne, was Jacinth, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Richard Harpur, of Littleover. The effigies of Jacinth and Elizabeth, executed with much care, and evidently portraits, lie side by side, facing the east, on a large altar tomb, the foot of which is against the east wall of the north aisle.¹⁰ On its north side are figures of three of the children kneeling, and the fourth is placed in a most realistic cradle. Within two wreaths at the west end of the tomb are the arms of Sacheverell quartering Stathum, Morley, and Hopwell, and the arms of Harpur quartering Brock, Findern, and Willington. On the south is the following nine-quartered coat, fully explained by the early pedigree of the family, already given:— Sacheverell, Snitterton, Hopwell, Stathum, Massey, Risley, Morley, De la Launde, and Estaferen. Against the east wall, immediately above the feet of the effigies, and blocking up one light of the window, is a tablet bearing the following touching inscription:—

D. O. M. P. S.

Hic jacent corpora, non item spes Jacinthi Sachevereli de Morley in Com. Derby. armigeri; et Elizabethas ejus tam in morte quam in vitae sociae; quam quidem Elizabetham Richardi Harpur de Littleover in eodem com. militis filiam ille uxorem sibi ducens, simul et felicitatem amoris mutui tam pignora quam fructus ex ea suscepit filios tres, Henricum, Radulphum, et Richardum, filiam unicum Dorotheam ipse dierum, divitiarum ac famae satur, annos numerans lxxix, facit cedens huc recessit xxii Januar.

⁶ Bassano mentions an exact duplicate of this coat that used to be on the wainscot at Dethick Hall, and which he noted (1710) at Glapwell Hall, where it had been removed. For an account of these quarterings, and general information respecting the Babington pedigree, see Churches of Derbyshire, vol. i., under Ashover and Dethick. Some blunders were made with the heraldry of this elaborate shield when it was repainted in 1850.

This tablet is clearly of a rather later date than the tomb itself. For this we can offer a very reasonable solution. The bold avowal of the "orthodox Roman faith," contained in the inscription, could hardly have been put up during the Commonwealth. John Harpur, who succeeded William Bennett in the rectory of Morley in 1647, was brother-in-law of Jacinth Sacheverell. He was episcopally instituted in 1662, on the presentation of Jacinth's heir, and we think it would be about that date, or during the later years of his rectorship, that this remarkable inscription was permitted to be put up. Several of the Harpur family had themselves suffered for recusancy, and probably John Harpur was one of those High Churchmen who could look with much leniency, if not with partiality, on those who in spite of all pains and penalties had thought it right to cleave to the Roman faith. Poor Jacinth Sacheverell suffered severely in divers ways, and various particulars that can be gleaned respecting his life prove the truthfulness of the careworn features of his effigy.¹¹

But this is not the place to enter into seventeenth century biography. On the pavement, close to this monument, are incised slabs to the memory of his four children, which we may be pardoned for reproducing, as they are not given in the History of Morley:—

"Here lieth y^e bodie of Henry Sacheverell ye eldest sonne of Jacinth Sacheverell Esq. Lord of this Towne by Elizabeth his wife who died in London ye 30th day of Decem 1638 being aged 19 yeeres & 5 monthes having beene married but 5 weekes before."

His effigy is depicted in long hair, and holding an open book in his hand. Note that the sculptor has shown as much of the beads of a rosary as he dared.¹²

"Here lieth the bodye of Raph Sacheverell second sone of Jacinth Sacheverell by Elizabeth his wife who died the 30 day of Novr 1625 being aged one yeere and 5 weekes."

The child is represented in a long gown and cap, holding a skull in his hands. On one side of the head is an hour glass, on the other a sprig of rosemary or some herb.

"Richard Sacheverell the third sone of Jacinth Sacheverell by Elizabeth his wife died in the yere of our Lord 1628 in December and lyeth buried at Sutton Colefeeld church in Warricksheere."

This child is represented swathed in its chrysom, or baptismal robe, thus betokening that it died before it was a month old.

She holds a book in her hands, and wears a necklace with a pendant.¹³

11 On a portrait of Jacynth Sacheverell (dated 1638, the year of the death of his son Henry), and now in the possession of Captain Bateman, are written the following lines:—

"Quae mihi nascenti luxerunt sydera? Quae tam
Noxia pars coeli est ut me nil tale merentem
Laiserit, et primis infortunarit ab annis?"

12 Possibly this slab was the work of a local artificer. A list of recusants, put in the hands of Lord Keeper Puckeringe, on Feb. 2nd, 1595, includes "One Greene a Carpenter and Mason, dwellinge at Morley on Mr. Sacheverell's lande v miles beyonde Darbye (was servant to Mr. Bentley), who maketh all the little Beades that bee in boxes; hee made a secrete place in Mr. Bentley's house at Lea with a dore of free stone that no man could judge there were any such place, and maketh all the secrete in Recusants houses in that Countrey."—Dom. St. Papers, Eliz., vol. 251, No. 13 and 14.

13 "1623, Novemb. 30. Dorotheie Sacheverell daughter of the Right Worll Jacinth Sacheverell Esquier and Elizabeth his wife was baptized." Parish Registers.

Close to these alabaster Slabs of Jacinth's children, and under a wooden platform on which stands an harmonium, is another one incised with the half-length figure of a boy in a cap; of this, too, we give the inscription, as it is somewhat worn, and not given in the History of Morley.

"Hic jacet corpus Richardi filii Johannis Harpur hujus ecclesie rectoris et Maria uxoris ejus utrisque juxta charissimi qui quum bienniu & quinque menses vixisset animam expiravit 25 Martii. A. Dni. 1660."

In the south-east angle of the chapel at the east end of the south aisle, is a mural monument of repellent design, having half length figures of Jonathas Sacheverell and his wife. Below them is this inscription, affording a curious contrast to that of his brother in the opposite aisle:—

"Here lyeth the body of Jonathas Sacheverell second son to Henry Sacheverell of Morley, Esqv, and Jane his Wife, daughter to Sir Humphrey Bradburne, of Bradburne, Knt.; which Jonathas married Elizabeth¹⁴ daughter to Mr Ralph Owen, Gent., and had issue by her, two sons, John and Nathaniel, who both died in their infancy. He was pious, charitable, and a true lover of his friend, and the last of the eldest line of the Sacheverells of Morley in Darbyshire, who died a true Protestant in the faith of Jesus Christ, the viii day of November, 1662, the 79 year of his age."

Jonathas is said to have been the first of the Sacheverells. of Morley, who left the Roman faith. It is also said, though we would hope without truth, that the reason of his conversion, late in life, was the hope that he would thereby secure the Morley estates on the decease of his brother Jacinth, it being a principle constantly acted upon for the government to strain every point to give succession to those of the establishment. But Jacinth bequeathed the property to his relative of the Barton line, to the exclusion of his brother, who being untainted with recusancy was allowed to inherit. Henry Sacheverell, of Barton, Notts., did not long retain the property, dying two months before his cousin Jonathas. There is an ugly altar tomb to his memory, in the north aisle, thus inscribed:—

"Here lyes the body of Henry Sacheverell, late of Barton, in the Cotmty of Nottingham, Esq., who being descended from William, the second son of Sir Henry Sacheverell, Lord of this Manor, upon failer of issue male of the eldest line of the said Sir Henry, in Jacynth and Jonathas Sacheverell, succeeded the said Jacynth in this estate of Morley, and dyed the sixteenth day of September, in the yeare of our Lord 1662, and leaving issue William, Catherine, and Joyce."

There is another raised tomb in this aisle, fully described in the History of Morley, to William Sacheverell, son and heir of Henry Sacheverell, 1691, and to Jane, his second wife, 1709. William Sacheverell, in making a settlement of his property, left his three surviving daughters, Joyce, Elizabeth, and Jane, coheiresses of a moiety of his estates. Joyce became the wife of Robert Wilmot of Chaddesden; Elizabeth, of John Osborne of Derby; and Jane died unmarried.

There is also a tomb at the east end of this aisle to Robert Sacheverell, of Barton, son of the last-named William, who died in 1714. His only surviving daughter, by his first wife, married Edward Pole, of Radbourn.

? 1682. "May 9. Mrs Sacheverill of Derby Relict of Jonathan Sacheverill of Darby Esq was buried." "Mistress Elizabeth Sacheverell above named the Relict of Jonathan Sacheverell Esq did give vnto this church a comunion cup and cover to it, and did also give six pound the interest whereof is to be employed to the Repaire of that part of the Isle of the church in which hers and her husbands Tombe stand and fowre pound more the interest whereof is to be paid yearly to ye clarcke for the keepinge of there Tombs in a decent manner from dust, or any other defilements." The chalice, with its cover, which originally served for a paten, was presented to the church at Morley by Mrs. Elizabeth Sacheverall in or about the year 1663-4, the "hall mark " being of that period. The chalice has the following inscription round the bowls:—"The Guift of Ellezabeth Sacheurell Relict of Jonathas Sachenrell Esq: for the vse of the Prish Church of Morley." Mistress Elizabeth was also the donor of a velvet altar cloth and pulpit cushion to All Saints', Derby.

A marble slab above this monument is to the memory of William and Henry, the two sons of William Sacheverell (another son of William, who died in 1691), by Alice, daughter of George Sitwell "y^e last male heirs of the family of y^e Sacheverells, formerly resident here, but late of Barton, in Nottinghamshire. They both dyed infants, 1723 and 1724.

There are also tablets in this aisle to Katherine Sitwell, eldest daughter of Henry Sacheverell, aud wife of Francis Sitwell, of Renishaw, 1705 – to Jane Sacheverell, only daughter of William Sacheverell by his second wife, 1746 – and to Elizabeth, daughter of George Sitwell, 1769
